By TERRENCE O'FLAHERTY

HOLLYWOOD — One of the new performers who seems to be in a better position, than most is Hal Buckley, who made his TV debut on "OK Crackerby." He looks at his good fortune with a shrug and a big smile because he appears to be successful as a human being first and actor second; this is a rare condition.

He's no pretty boy, but he has a memorable face and a catching personality.

"I look at myself in the mirror and I don't really like me," he said. "I'm definitely not the type."

Buckley plays the role of the tutor for a newly-rich business tycoon (Burl Ives). The tycoon buys his way through the world with money, but senses that his three homely kids are going to need more than money; he hires a tutor from Harvard who turns out to be the only guy he can't buy.

"THEY AUDITIONED so many people for the role of the tutor that they couldn't come to a decision, so the producers' wives took a hand in it and selected me. They said the other guys were good-looking but I was so funny-looking they liked me the best," Buckley explained.

He was born in Westport, Conn., and educated at Harvard, but he gained his experience as an off-Broadway actor and entertainer in small night clubs like the Bon Soir. He has a lot of confidence, based on the size of his bank account, which grew due to the enormous number of commercials he has done in the last two years.

"Also, I happen to be good," he added. "A nightclub audience is drunk and they know immediately whether they like you or not. In Hollywood, it's not so easy. The only ones who react honestly to anything in Hollywood are children. I just don't get friendly with anyone any more. We've already lost two producers and three dogs. Or maybe it's the other way around."

"They feed everyone into a sample studio audience these days, you know. Their impressions are given to a computer and in this way they try to tell in advance of the premiere whether the audience will like a performer or not. That's the way we lost one dog. Also the computer didn't like the youngest kid and he was immediately replaced. I was sorry about the youngster; we got along fine. But I never could relate to that first dog."

Remembering the computer, Buckley still retains his New York apartment, but he seems to be fitting into the Hollywood scene very comfortably. He has a revolving bed and an English valet.

"MY GOSH! I have Max von Sydow's dressing room! He's the Swedish actor who played Christ in 'The Greatest Story Ever Told.' It's all very impressive."

"Is the decor Swedish modern?" I asked.

"No, it's early Halloween." I have a hunch that that

Street Work To Begin in Carson Area

Construction of curbs and other improvements will begin soon on Jay and 222nd streets east of Meyler street in the Carson area, near Harbor General Hospital, has been announced by Supervisor Kenneth Hahn.

A contract for the work was awarded to the H. E. Baker Construction Co., lowest of seven bidders.

The improvements were requested by property owners in the area by petition and the Board of Supervisors approved the work after a public hearing. Costs will be shared by residents whose property benefits from the work.

Jay and 222nd streets extend approximately 600 feet east of Meyler street.

Curbs, gutters, pavement and driveway aprons will be provided on these sections, along with the easterly side of Meyler, connecting the two streets, Hahn said.

Two Evening Courses Scheduled by College

The literary and musical life of America will be the focus of two courses offered in the evening hours by California State College at Palos Verdes this fall. "American Music" and "Masterpieces of American Literature" are designed for upper-division students and those already possessing a degree who are not able to attend college during the day. Each course will carry four quarter credits and they may apply to the American Studies major or be used as elective credit.

The admission procedure for these courses involves verification of eligibility by the submission of transcripts of previous college work. Students whose transcripts have not arrived at the time of registration may register subject to later determination of eligibility.

art music, etc. According to Professor Marshall Bialosky, the course will focus on the work of Charles Ives, Elliott Carter, and Aaron Copland, among others, as well as the dynamic work of a large number of younger composers presently active in this country. Professor Bialosky said that the course will combine lectures and discussion and will emphasize active involvement with the music itself through both records and attendance of local events featuring contemporary music. "MASTERPIECES of American Literature," offered Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m., will involve the reading of major works of American writers. Dr. Marvin Laser, instructor for the course, has selected the works to be studied for their intrinsic literary interest and for the light they throw on present-day American civilization.
